«Foxborough, Mass.» The writer asks advice about the kind of bonnets that should be made for the Anti-Slavery fair. The writer has found that Abolitionists are "few and far between;" visiting in Keene, New Hampshire, she found people "wilfully ignorant" on the subject. Asks if they could get Mr. Garrison to lecture in Foxborough.

[Foxborough, Mass.] The writer informs the addressee that Mrs. Ripley had told her that Miss Martha Ball, who had recently stopped at the George Ripleys' house, was coming again before long to form abolition societies. The writer believed that there was some plan in operation and remarks "with grief" on the extent of the spirit of New Organization. Wishes Mrs. Chapman could come to Foxborough and go from house to house.

Mr. Poor has incited his people to oppose Garrison's Sabbath views. The writer has spent much time with the young Abolitionists, but their parents don't encourage them. ‹Foxborough, Mass.› The writer explains the delay in sending information requested by the addressee. She attended the lectures by Alanson St. Clair, which pleased all that heard them. He spoke very highly of his friend Garrison. "I watched him suspiciously learning from the Liberator that there was some disaffection in the ranks of the Abolition‹ists›." At the close of the lecture he urgently sought subscribers for the Massachusetts Abolitionist and, none coming forward, he also invited subscriptions for the Liberator, denying that the Abolitionist was got up in opposition to the Liberator. The writer, on inquiring of a friend with whom St. Clair stayed, learned that the latter did [illegible]approve of all of Mr. Garrison's measures. The writer regrets the apathy of people in «Foxborough, Mass.» The bearer of the letter, Spencer P. Hodges, has been at home on a visit, extending a good influence in the neighborhood in respect to Abolitionism and Non-Resistance. The writer explains that nothing has been done for the Anti-Slavery fair because of her illness. Tells of the propaganda and activity of the anti-Garrisonian forces. (Asa?) Cummings lectured in Thanksgiving week, explaining Third Party votes. Mr. Poor, the Orthodox minister, was eloquent against Non-Resistance and the Infidel Convention. Abolition societies, including a female one, have been formed, and the Emancipator introduced. Some that belonged to the writer's p[illegible] have gone over to the other side, but "we are now ... Believes that what has been done for the slave is "the result of independent individual exertion, combining & harmonising in their operation," and that organisation has been a hindrance to moral enterprises. Gives examples. Science is in less danger from organisation, but "the work of ages in morals... has got to be done over again." Elaborates on this thought. Asks the addressee: "why place friend A.M. To Mary A. Estlin

«Town Hall, Manchester, (England)» The writer discusses an Anti-Slavery meeting in Manchester. Gives the names of the presiding officers: Rev. Walter Scott and Rev. W. Parkes. Says that Dr. Beard is speaking. He mentions L. Kossuth's unfaithfulness to the Anti-Slavery cause and read a letter from Mazzini. The writer praises P. Pillsbury's attack on the American churches. At the end of the speech, Joseph Parker demanded the right to speak and S. R. Ward threatened to leave the meeting. The writer criticises Barker's actions. Reports on speeches by W. W. Brown and G. Thompson.

To Mary A. Estlin

[Bathwick Hill, Bath, England] The writer has been prevented from making arrangements for Miss [Sarah] Pugh's visit to Bath by the death of a dear friend. Mrs. Henry Cotterell will be happy to receive Miss Pugh as her guest during her stay here. Hopes the Reports have been well circulated, and that the ladies will be prepared to take up a more rigorous line of action. Mrs. Richardson is urging the Free Labour Movement upon them and telling about awful instances of "perverts to infidelity" by sentiments learned from the Liberator and similar papers.
